Eric's practice focuses on complex litigation, primarily in antitrust and competition matters. This includes frequently representing and counseling large commercial clients in pursuing affirmative recoveries. Since joining the firm in 2007, Eric has represented both plaintiffs and defendants in multidistrict litigation involving claims of price fixing, pay-for-delay schemes, monopolization, unfair business practices, and products liability.

Eric has also represented various parties on both sides of the aisle in an array of commercial disputes, including cases arising from allegations of trademark infringement, trade secret misappropriation, price discrimination, and breach of licensing agreements. Eric's experience includes pre-trial motion practice (including regular and extensive brief writing), discovery, trials, as well as appellate advocacy.

Eric also represents and assists corporate clients in responding to subpoenas, Civil Investigative Demands (CIDs), and other third-party discovery obligations.
