Hannah is a senior associate attorney in Zelles Dallas office and represents many of the worlds largest insurers in complex first-party property insurance disputes across the country. She advises insurers on a broad range of matters relating to property damage arising out of weather-related events, builders risk issues, business interruption, and bad faith claims. Hannah also has significant first and third-party litigation experience and has defended clients before state and federal courts including motion practice and trial.

Prior to joining the firm, Hannah worked for a national law firm where she advised and represented international insurers relating to specific first-party property insurance claims.
